No 10, 91

Dear Jane, indeed I am guilty of neglect of my correspondence and I see you my apologies. The reason: general slowdown and increasing procrastination due to advancing age; another, a rather hectic summer and fall (see below).

First, in answer to the immediate problem: It is clear to me, first particularly from the statement in Sp’s “Forbidding and Helen,” that his father was baptized Johann Wilhelm but was called Wilhelm throughout his life and eventually. Johann got lost quite understandably in the Wilhelmian era. Since the different types of print, used in Sp’s book. If you want an absolutely authentic confirmation I could write to his daughter, Margot Clees, who lives in B EQUIVALENT TO MY OLD GERMAN CLUB. IT IS NOT 3 SUBURBS OF DORTMUND BUT A SMALL TOWN, 15 KM. EAST OF DORTMUND.

I read your essay on bildung studi with great interest. As far as Spemann’s debt to Roux goes you could quote in whole of Sp’s “W. Roux als Experimentator” Naturwiss., Heft 23, 4/6, 1920, on the occasion of Roux’s 70th birthday. This essay is followed by one of H. Driesch “Roux als bedeut.” I hope that in the printed version of your article you will enlighten me and others as to the discrepancy (unresolved with enlightenment) between Hebbel’s “strict materialism” and his by me) between Hebbel’s “strict materialism” and his Department of Biology

"If the Welttheil" and did not quite believe his apparent commitment to faith and Neoplatonic philosophy. You can't have it both ways. But there was a strong artistic strand in Haeckel, and one forges artists almost any hopes in their personal philosophy if they are good artists. By the way, along the line of history of ideas, did you see the quixotic reference to Curier's typology in the latest (autumn) issue of "Perspectives..."? It would seem under a new term "structuralism"? It is contrasted to A. Weismann, who has become an -ism, poor man, well, his new angle of quasi-anti-evolution will play into the hands of our Creationists - that's what we need most badly these days! To see in all this else another bend in the part of our English colleagues - to be different, "lilygay" and original at very price (Wolpert etc).

At the Meeting of the Neuroscientists at L.A. a couple of weeks ago, the "Test scienst" for me, edited by Max Cole, was unveiled, and I have received a "Prädruck exemplar", bound in brown leather with gold leaf - looks like taken from the library of Louis Pasteur. It is all about brain embryology and contains very flattering critiques by M. Lewis and John and 15 other essays. In a way it pegs. To survive to my age!

Well, on the personal side, the highlight was aSelected visit of my London brother and his wife to the US. It is not clear to me why he visited for several decades to the US (he has lived in London since 1950), but apparently his skepticism about US has now turned into enthusiasm. He started with a reunion on Lake Tahoe in Northern Calif., with Davis where we had a relaxed 10 days with excursions to the mountains and the lake. Then they explored the West, from Oregon etc, and... lived in St. Louis for a week. I could fly in for a week-end and we really had a wonderful time and belted westward.

Both daughters are extremely busy, and as a result, I see otherwise little of them. Doris goes the finishing touch to her thesis on the geol. prehistory of the S.F. Bay area and hopes to get her degree before the school in over. Gerda will finish High School next June and do an internship in N.Y.

I am busy as usual, working on all kinds of end N.Y. I don't remember whether I sent you a reprint of the paper which appeared in January in the first volume of J. of Neurosci. I'll be glad to send you one if I have any left. Postoffice, a particularly small fellow from Australia, but when my grant expires end of next year, I'll close shop. However, if I hope to keep my Office, if not, I can take refuge in the Medical School, where Mr. Lowen set aside a room for me, in exchange for my reprint collection. By the way, his successor, Jerry Fishbein from Harvard, might be in Neuro technology and he is a good friend.

I hope you can handle your innumerable commitments without too much stress. We both should be glad and happy that we still swim in the mainstream, though, of course, you are a young man compared to me.

All my best, love,

[Signature]